SURVIVAL

The Nature of Russia is a unique collection of three programmes which look behind the political face of Russia - a little known land of fascinating contrast.

LAND OF THE WHITE FOX

The Russian people have always had a deep relationship with the Russian taiga, the largest forest on earth.

As the sun sinks below the horizon of the taiga, it will not be seen again for three months on the Russian arctic tundra.

We look at the tundra and its wildlife through the eyes of the Nentsy people - arctic reindeer herders. In places the tundra has been polluted and destroyed by industry. In winter Arctic foxes are caught by local hunting brigades, and their white pelts sold on the international fur markets.

Yet essentially the tundra has changed little from the land the Nentsy peoples encountered hundreds of years ago.
